AMERICAN GIRL A SUCCESS

Good Specialties and Lively Situations Delight the Audience.

The "American Girl" caught the house last night at the Orpheum. There is a hearty display of patriotism in the piece that seemed to appeal most effectively to the audience. The company as a whole appeared to far better advantage than in "Quo Vadis."

Jessie Norton, first as the ingenious Twister, and afterwards, as the loyal and decidedly American Saratoga, has won her way into the hearts of the Orpheum playgoers for keeps. As an encore last night this versatile sou-brette sang a German version of "Hello, Mah Baby," and after that anything that Jessie may sing, say and do, goes.

Mr. Watson, as the typical American hustler was capital, and Frank Wyman played the heavy in satisfactory style. Carl Berch is uniformly good as the lead, and indeed, only lack of space prevents a good word for all the players. They deserve it. The two little stars, Evelyn and Lillian, are delightful. They were great entertainers last night, whether in their well-trained pantomime, their specialties, or their well rendered lines.

Plays like the "American Girl," with their ridicule of foolish customs, and their fervid patriotism, are always popular, and are really excellent educators. The Ellefords gave a great little show last night, and there is now no doubt that the experiment of comedy and drama at popular prices will be emphatically a success in Honolulu. The "American Girl" goes on once more tonight for the last time, and should draw an equally good house. Last night the floor was crowded. Only the old-time gallery that used to turn out en masse to see Hogan is missing. The boys have not yet caught on to the good thing. The Ellefords will hit the gallery in the right place, and 25 cents is not a prohibitive price.

ALLAN DUNN.

"THE CONSULAR EQUINE."

The Chinese Consul's Horse is Finally Rescued.

After much consumption of coolie and candle power, the Chinese Consul's horse was finally dragged from the cesspool into which he unwittingly fell a short time before 1 o'clock yesterday morning. The crowd who assisted at the rescue was near to being in at the death as the horse was quite helpless through his long immersion. The last protest of the animal against imprisonment was the biting of Waike Vida's leg as that officer, suspended face downwards by the legs, was charitably employed in attempting to get a sling under the belly of the horse.

Shortly before the wind-up the Consul treated the on-looking neighborhood to drinks and cigars, and refused the offer of one sportsman to give away dollars for the horse as he stood.

"I gave two hundred cold for him," said the Imperial representative, "and I'll stand to lose all or none."

The Consul stands to lose none, as the veterinary has pronounced the horse sound in wind and limb and prophesied his entire recovery in a few weeks. Meanwhile the Consul will ride in an automobile.

Mrs. Hendricks' Accident.

The lady who was the victim of a carriage accident on Beretania street on Saturday, Mrs. Hendricks, is confined to her home at Diamond Head. She sustained a number of painful bruises, and was cut about the head. Her wounds, however, are not of a serious nature.

A DEAD FLY SETTLED IT.

That a dead fly should settle a doubtful question of literary history seems preposterous, but a member of the Entomological Society of London, at a late meeting of that body, told how it really happened. It seems that some literary members were looking over a book of notes made by Robert Louis Stevenson, and as there was no date in the book, they could not determine whether he made the notes before or after he went to Samoa to live. For some reason it was important that this should be determined, and while the men were turning over the leaves they found a dead fly between them. One of them was an entomologist, and he at once recognized the fly as belonging to a species peculiar to the Polynesian Islands. It was evident, therefore, that the notes were written at Samoa.

HER 100TH BIRTHDAY.

Mrs. Hannah Bartow of Brunswick, N. J., celebrated there Wednesday her entrance on her 100th year. Her relatives held a family reunion at her home. Mrs. Bartow's sight is good and her bodily health fair. Despite her age she still insists upon pursuing trifling duties about the house. Mrs. Bartow was a servant for Commodore Vanderbilt when he kept his hotel at Brunswick. Up to 1880 Mrs. Bartow was one of four sisters then living, whose aggregate age was 399 years. The four sisters between them had thirteen husbands.

MELBA'S SOLDIER BROTHER.

A bright young volunteer who has just gone to South Africa as a member of the Marquis of Tullibardine's Horse, is Ernest Mitchell, youngest brother of Mme. Melba. Mr. Mitchell was first intended for life on one of his father's Australian estates, but that not suiting him, he took up the study of music. He possessed a fine tenor voice and at one time it seemed he would some day sing Romeo to the Juliet of his distinguished sister. But he gave up music and has now become a soldier.

"FIGHTING BOB" AND THE BURG-LAR.

Admiral Robley D. Evans says in his book of memoirs that one of his most exciting adventures was a number of years ago when his landlady summoned him to rout out a burglar who was in her cellar. "Fighting Bob" didn't fancy the task, but he undertook it for the honor of the service. He and the burglar had a pistol duel in the dark, the latter finally going down with a bullet in his thigh.

The Mikado of Japan has been presented by several of his faithful subjects with an American automobile (bought in Chicago). He is quite proud of the vehicle, and makes frequent trips in and around the capital with it.
